Regimental History

First Cavalry

KENTUCKY

(3-YEARS)

First Cavalry. -- Cols., Frank Wolford, Silas Adams, Lieut.-Cols. John W. Letcher, Francis N. Helveti; Majs., John A. Brents, William A. Coffee, William N. Owens, Thomas Rowland, Alverson T. Keen, Fountain T. Fox, George W. Drye.

This regiment was organized with volunteers from Garrard, Casey and adjoining counties, and the men went into Camp Dick Robinson immediately after the August election in 1861. The first movement of the regiment was in August, when several companies under command of Lieut.-Col. John W. Letcher, went to Lexington to protect the passage of arms through that place. They guarded the wagons to Nicholasville, and on to Camp Dick Robinson. Other duty of similar character was also performed.

The first battle fought by Wolford's men was at Camp Wild Cat, in October, where the conduct of the regiment was highly praised by Gen. Schoepf and others. On Oct. 28, 1861, the regiment was mustered into the U. S. service by Gen. Thomas, and from that time it served with the utmost activity throughout the war.

On Nov. 30, was placed in the 11 brigade, commanded by Gen. J. T. Boyle, and on Dec. 10, five companies were sent to Prestonburg, Ky., by way of Danville, Lexington and Mt. Sterling. They united with Gen. Garfield's force in that part of Kentucky, and Garfield reported constant fighting against the Confederates under Gen. Humphrey Marshall.

The regiment participated in the battle of Mill Springs, where the Confederates under Gens. Crittenden and Zollicoffer were signally defeated. Wolford reported 3 killed and 19 wounded, 8 mortally. In April the regiment moved to the vicinity of Nashville and was used for various expeditions in that section, being at the time assigned to Dumont's division of Buell's army.

In August it moved to Murfreesboro, then to Nashville, and thence northward with Buell's army on its march to Kentucky, passing through Munfordsville, Elizabethtown and Hodgenville. At New Haven it took part in the capture of the Georgia regiment of Col. Crawford. It took part in the battle of Perryville, then joined in the pursuit of Bragg, after which it returned and moved to Nashville.

When Buell was superseded by Rosecrans, the regiment was sent into Kentucky to protect the country against the efforts of the Confederate cavalry to destroy railroads. In March, 1863, it aided in resisting the raid of Confederate Gen. Pegram into the state, and on the 30th fought a severe battle at Dutton's hill, near Crab Orchard.

Toward the latter part of August the East Tennessee expedition under Gen. Burnside started, and the regiment accompanied Hascall's division, to Kingston, Tenn., by way of Somerset and Montgomery. This campaign, with all its incidents, can not be here detailed, but it is enough to say that the regiment was constantly active, moving from place to place, fighting at Kingston, Philadelphia, Maryville and many other places.

In the siege of Knoxville the cavalry was placed on the south side of the river, the men being dismounted and placed in defenses on the hills, where they successfully resisted all assaults, the loss of the regiment during the siege being 13 men. After the siege the cavalry followed Longstreet up the Tennessee valley, and at Bean's station a severe and bloody fight occurred, in which Col. Welford and his men bore a most conspicuous part.

The regiment remained in East Tennessee until Feb., 1864, when it was sent to Mt. Sterling, Ky., where it refitted and reorganized for the great campaign in Georgia under Gen. Sherman. The regiment engaged in many encounters, in which it suffered losses before Atlanta was reached, but these can not be detailed here. The most notable event was the Stoneman raid to Macon, GA, in which Stoneman was captured, but the regiment fared better. The official report states that "great credit is due to Col. Adams for the energy and management displayed by him in bringing his command out as safely as he has," his loss in killed, wounded and captured being only 20.

After this the regiment returned to Kentucky, and after the expedition to Saltville, Va., in which it was as active and useful as ever, fighting, marching and sustaining losses, it returned to Kentucky and on Dec. 31, 1864, after nearly three and one-half years of continuous hard service, having performed its full duty to the state and country, it was mustered out at Camp Nelson.
